

SEED - Study to Explore Early Development
Follow-up Study Survey for Young Adults

A man with autism talks about the SEED follow up study survey

Check this out.

I just got an email about this study called seed follow up.

It's sponsored by the CDC.

At first, I couldn't figure out why they were emailing me, but they're trying to learn more about autistic people as they grow up.

I know that my family participated in the seed study when I was younger and my parents answered questions when I was a kid.

But now that I'm older, the CDC wants to hear from me.

If your family participated in the seed study, you might be hearing from the CDC, too.

They have a survey with questions about work school and things I do for fun.

Some questions might be kind of personal, but it says that everything I share will be kept private and I can skip any questions I don't want to answer.

It takes about 40 minutes and I'll get a $20 gift card when I'm done.

I can do the survey online with a link or over the phone with someone from the study team.

It can even be completed by mail.

I'm going to do it.

It feels good to be a part of something that can make a difference.

Who knows?

Maybe my input can change things and help improve things for other autistic people.

For more Information Visit www.cdc.gov/autism/seed